“ I met Randy in high school. While walking to Mechanics class. He was leaning on against the wall with a black shirt that had white writing on it saying Killer. And i made a comment like "Eh Killer). And he puffed up at me and the fight was on. We seen each other and never spoke to each other throughout the time at school. The day we graduated in the parking lot he approached with his hand out to shake mine. He said he did not want anyone to dislike him or him carry any reason to dislike someone else. He apologized for the fight and so did I. He asked if i wanted to go cruising with him to celebrate graduating. i thought, wow i really underestimated who he was. After that day i did not see him until i got a job where he worked. We worked side by side for over 10 years. We both watched as we both were married and had kids, divorced and got remarried had kids and divorced again. After the business shut down and we went separate ways in terms of work and where we lived. We kept in touch over the years. He told me his condition months ago. He was not scared or expressed any regrets in life. He will always be a class act in my mind. Love you bro!!! See you on the other side.
